“I Can Seed Something Here, I Have Land”: Intersectionality, Urban Agriculture, and Community Benefit in Quito, Ecuador

Featuring: Alexandra Rodriguez and Laine Young

Discussion Questions

1. Why is food insecurity such a concern in Quito? What factors contribute to the risk of food insecurity among the citizens of Quito and how are these similar/different from the risks to food insecurity where you live?
2. What is urban agriculture and how can it contribute to sustainable food system change?
3. How are AGRUPAR’s urban agriculture projects changing the lives of women in Quito? Why do you think small scale urban agriculture is having such a big impact?
4. What is intersectionality? Why is an intersectional analysis critical to understanding the lived experiences of food system actors, especially women and Black, Indigenous and People of Colour (BIPOC)?
